Introduction: “Origins and Beyond” by David Joseph Marcou, This Book’s Author-Photographer.

I’ve written for 60 years, and came to photography 35-40 years ago. I first became interested in photos paging through my parents’ albums. Many of their black-and-white wedding photos, for one thing, are gorgeous. They were married on Valentine’s Day 1950, and I was born 9 months and 11 days later. Six competitive siblings were born after me, and in addition to our parents, the Franciscan Sisters of Perpetual Adoration educated us early. The FSPAs have had two nuns praying without interruption in their HQ chapel, St. Rose Convent’s in La Crosse, more than 135 years. Newsman Charles Kurault once praised those nuns’ grace and tenacity very effusively.

Of the 85-plus books I’ve been principal-author for, I’m pleased with the 15-volume “Spirit of America” series; the 18-volume “Human Character” photo book series; the 4-volume “Tenacity of Pleasant Surprises” series; and the collection of my son’s and my best photos “American Eyes” (5 expanding editions). I’m also pleased with the books I’ve authored inspired by my London-Missouri Reporting graduate semester in 1981. I had to drop back and earn a Bachelor of Journalism degree, due to poor grades then, because I spent more time in Britain photographing than writing 12 required stories. But I’ve learned positive lessons from my successes and defeats, including that when working on good things I truly believe in, to never really take “no” for an answer.

Thus, my greatest academic defeat has since resulted in some of my best work. One of the photos I salvaged from Britain (my second now-ex-wife absconded in 1987 with many of my best early images) was my best photo-portrait of Bert Hardy with his dogs Lizzie and Kim, a print of which I donated to the Photographs Collection of the British National Portrait Gallery (NPGx126230). Also, inspired by my 1981 story on Hardy, James Cameron, and their employer-magazine, I’ve authored six books about them, including the first complete history (“All the Best”) published about Picture Post, Britain’s most popular magazine during WWII and post-war. It’s helped too that I met and photographed Nobel Peace Laureate Mother Teresa in 1985 in Anyang, Korea, later receiving 18 personal letters from her, and then photographed three more Nobel Peace Laureates: Al Gore, Elie Wiesel, and Barack Obama.

I’ve written extensively about seven photographers whose works I admire greatly -- Edward Steichen, Lewis Hine, Dorothea Lange, Annie Leibovitz, Henri Cartier-Bresson, Gordon Parks, and Bert Hardy. I also admire Jane Bown’s photos. And the works of photography’s inventor Joseph Nicephore Niepce and photo-artists Andre Kertesz, W.E. Smith, Robert Frank, Ralph Morse, John Chillingworth, Roger Grant, Jon Tarrant, Jim Southworth, Veita Jo Hampton, Angus McDougall, Hanno Hardt, David Gill, Paul Primus, Vivian Maier, Matt A. Marcou, and John Loengard move me decently as well.

This book began with a strong interest in pulling together some of my best photos of the homeless and put-upon, “The In-Betweeners”. Lewis Hine and Dorothea Lange inspired that section especially. The “Helpers” section's photos were chosen from my portfolio of favorite images generally conveying a more-positive story. All the photographers I’ve mentioned plus the work of Elliott Erwitt have inspired that section. “The Amish” section only includes 14 of my photos of that group. But none of the latter photos show the Amish on farms, where many romantic notions about that group derive. I mainly photograph the Amish as they travel, and even working and shopping within cities.

There are more than 300 photos in this book. And I appreciate all the people who contribute creatively and monetarily to my books, and have published itemized lists of those people and/or their organizations previously. This time, I’d like to thank God especially, plus the powers that be at DigiCOPY; my mentors, subjects, and peers; my closest family and friends; and Snowball, an African-American Santa-like, hard-working window-washer in Madison whom I sadly never photographed (he passed ca. 1976). To all who read/view this photo book, enjoy your time with us. Readers could do a lot worse than to absorb some of the wisdoms from our Spirit of America series.
